Conclusions

- 1) A higher percentage of students who report frequently engaging in negative classroom behaviors such as skipping class and coming to class unprepared also report being very likely to withdraw.
- 2) Prompt feedback, increased in-class participation, and critical thinking are associated with a reduced percentage of students likely to withdraw.
- 3) The perception that colleges emphasize studying and providing the supports needed to succeed were related to higher percentages of students reporting that they would be likely to withdraw for all outcomes.
- 4) And...
